Lesson 1 For College Students:

Make Sure Your Stuff is Covered at College

BY ANDREW McCABE,
THE McCABE AGENCY

As students pack their most valuable possessions and head to colleges this fall, many aren't considering what might happen after they arrive. With classes, exams and social events on their minds, students may not give much thought about protecting their clothes, gadgets and other valuables in their home away from home. Students may be covered under their parents' policies, but it's important to learn definitive answers on proper insurance coverage.

Usually students who live in campus-associated housing – dorms or Greek houses – are covered under their parents' Allstate, home policies. There is typically no extra cost for this extended protection, and contents are covered 100 percent up to the amounts stated in the policy. However, highly valuable items may require additional protection in order to recover their full value.

For students who choose to live in off campus, non-university related housing, it's recommended that they secure their own renters insurance policies. Otherwise, coverage of personal property may be limited to only 10 percent.

A collegiate home should enjoy the same protection as a permanent home. A student's path towards earning a college degree should be free of pitfalls resulting from damage or theft of personal items that make a home away from home a special place. Having the proper level of coverage on prized possessions is a lesson that pays off long after students leave the classroom. ●

Dear Residents,

The adage, “it’s easy to take things for granted,” is certainly true for those of us fortunate enough to live in this wonderful village. Thanks to the Nicolet family, this week’s cover story, they bring to light that many of the wholesome, down to earth qualities that we enjoy in Whitefish Bay are not necessarily the norm elsewhere. This does not simply refer to the village’s physical amenities and the services provided, although they too are wonderful. In our community, kids zip down sidewalks in scooters without worry, and without incident. Neighbors look out for each other, and get to know one another. The neighborhood kids hang out together, many go to school together, and grow up—together. In many places outside of Whitefish Bay, this isn’t a given.

Here, there’s a real sense of community. It’s what brought Guy, who was living in Los Angeles with his wife and children, back to Whitefish Bay, where he spent his junior and senior year as a Blue Duke. Guy’s wife, Judy, has a fashionista background that has led her to large cities throughout Europe and the U.S. And yet, there’s one destination where Judy and Guy intend to call home, permanently. You guessed it, Whitefish Bay. Milwaukee is a genuine town, an unpretentious place with warm people, just like Judy and Guy.

In this month’s issue, check out all the wonderful events that bring our community together.

All the best,
 Josh

Genuine Whitefish Bay, Where the Nicolet Family is Here to Stay

BY JOSHUA BECKER

A bustling metropolis has lots to offer, at all hours of the day and night, from nightclubs and restaurants along Los Angeles' Sunset Strip, to glimmer and performances on New York's Broadway, to resorts and nightlife in Miami's South Beach. Fame and fortune seem around every corner.

On the other hand, in Milwaukee, and Whitefish Bay for that matter, the likelihood of bumping into a movie star or a celebrity pop singer isn't all that likely. Yet, Milwaukee, and particularly Whitefish Bay, outshines large metropolises in what really counts—warmth. Not the climate, but the people, the community, the values.

Two people who understand this clearly are Guy and Judy Nicolet, both of whom spent significant time immersed in big city life. Judy lived what she considered a somewhat glamorous lifestyle. As a former handbag buyer for Nordstrom, an upscale retailer, she traveled on behalf of the company to European fashion destinations, such as London, Paris and cities in Italy. Her husband, Guy, was a Los Angeles agent for television commercial directors, editors and graphic designers, and eventually a real estate agent during the boom years.

For both Guy and Judy, LA had lots to offer, year-round sunshine, swimming in the ocean, and beach towns with beautiful sunsets. And yet, there was always one place that Guy held close to his heart, a place where he spent his junior and senior year of high school—Whitefish Bay, Wisconsin. Here, said Guy, is where "I created some of my most cherished memories."

When Guy and Judy began a family, with very young children in LA, their priorities changed. The focus wasn't on making it big in LA, but making life better for their kids. LA did not seem ideal for raising a family. "In LA, and quite frankly in many of the bigger cities that we lived in," noted Judy, "it was about keeping up with the Joneses, what stroller do you have, what car do you drive, which preschool are you sending your kids to, is that organic? It's easy to get caught up in all of that and think those things are truly important when in the scheme of things, it isn't. I'm not saying that it doesn't exist here in Milwaukee, it's just that the priorities are different."

This difference led Guy and Judy, along with their children, Alexander and Kate, ten and seven-years-old, respectively, to Whitefish Bay, where they've never looked back. "It was absolutely for the best," said Judy. "I can't imagine raising them anywhere else."

It's what Guy calls, "sidewalk living," where he can chat with his neighbors about anything and everything, from topics as mundane as lawn care to matters as important as taking care of aging parents. There's a real connection to neighbors and community, where neighbors care for and look out for each other. For those who have lived their entire lives in or around Whitefish Bay, this community connection might be taken for granted. Yet, this sense of community is not the case in many other places.

Run-of-the-mill activities, such as riding scooters on the sidewalk or playing ball in the front yard without worry, are a blessing. "This is normal for our kids," said Judy. "They don't know any differently. Given where we have lived in the past, this isn't normal by today's standards. For us, it gives us hope that our kids will grow up with the appreciation of living in a community that allows them to enjoy the simple, yet important, things in life."

The expression, "it's the little things that count," are anything but little. Among them, Guy and his kids can pretend to be professional athletes at the high school's playing fields, can skip rocks along the lake at Klode Park, can play ghosts in the graveyard at late night barbecues with friends, and much, much more.

The physical surroundings and the community members make parenting easier, and better. "Whitefish Bay offers the comfort of focusing on the things that really matter and not all the things that complicate life," said Judy. There's no pressure to impress people, only the intention of upholding wholesome values. While Judy specialized in fashion, with an eye towards European handbag stylings, today she's just as comfortable in a t-shirt and blue jeans at a little league game.

Ultimately, it's all about coming home. For Judy, who grew up in Fairbanks, Alaska, "I always wanted to leave my small town, but now I'm back to a likeminded community, where people are down to earth with core values." For Guy, the close-knit community he treasured as a high school student is a proud legacy that he hands to his children.

It's always in style to come home. ●

College Application and Essay Expert Christina Craig Brings Expertise to Whitefish Bay Families

BY: LYNDA PETERSON, a Whitefish Bay resident whose daughter is Hannah Peterson, a client of Christina Craig College Counseling and incoming freshman at the University of Dayton, Ohio

Christina Craig

College counseling is in Christina Craig's DNA. Her mother, Cindi, was a high school guidance and college counselor for 25 years. Before Christina embarked on her own journey as a college counselor, she was a native of Bloomfield Hills, Michigan. By the time Christina reached middle school, she already knew that she wanted an out-of-state college experience.

"I took my first campus tour at the age of nine," Christina says. "On every family vacation my mom scheduled a tour at the closest college or university. As a kid, I couldn't foresee how valuable these experiences would be. Now, as a college counselor, I feel so fortunate to have been exposed to higher education from such a young age."

Christina is an expert on the college admissions essay. She has over 10 years of experience in the college counseling industry, both as a college counselor for Collegewise, a national college counseling firm, and as an admissions officer at Marquette University. She has a bachelor's degree from Columbia University in New York City as well as two graduate degrees from Marquette. She has brainstormed and edited over 300 college application essays with students located throughout the United States, as well as internationally.

The college search and application process has become increasingly stress-filled and confusing; misinformation abounds and parents

Spicy Watermelon Slices

Contributed by Kathy Maguire

Serves about 5

Ingredients:

- 1 tablespoon kosher or other coarse salt
- 1½ teaspoons ground chili pepper
- Zest and juice of 1 lime
- Lime wedges and mint leaves for garnish
- 1 (10-pound) watermelon, cut into wedges

Directions:

Combine salt, chili pepper and lime zest with a mortar and pestle. If you don't have a mortar and pestle, you can finely chop the lime zest and use a fork to mix it with the salt and chili powder. Arrange the watermelon wedges on a platter and drizzle with lime juice. Sprinkle the chili mixture on top. Garnish with lime wedges and mint leaves. Serve immediately or refrigerate until ready to serve.

There are few things more cooling on a hot summer's day than a refreshing slice of watermelon. Here's a kicked-up twist on the old summer favorite that's sure to be a hit at your next backyard gathering. These slices are an irresistible mix of hot and refreshing flavors!

of college-bound students don't know the best steps to proceed. Christina offers expert insider tips, culled from her years on both sides of the equation. For instance, she advises her clients to like the Facebook page for each college or university's incoming class in order to see whether they would mesh with the student body.

Christina builds immediate rapport with high school students. Parents appreciate that Christina can connect to their child, even in a way the parents can't reach. Students listen to Christina as she helps navigate the college application and essay process, alleviating stress for each family.

"Without Christina I would have been lost," says Allison Severin, a Whitefish Bay resident and 2015 graduate of Whitefish Bay High School. "She helped me get a sense for what I like and pointed me towards schools that held everything I was looking for. She helped me write essays that got straight to the point, yet had great detail. Christina was a great help."

Summer Recipe For Kids of All Ages!

Kiwi Lime Ice Pops

Submitted by Barney Bascomb

Makes 8 2-oz. pops

Active Time: 30 minutes. Total Time: 1½ hours

INGREDIENTS:

- 1 1/3 cups water
- 2/3 cup sugar
- 1 teaspoon finely freshly grated lime zest
- 1 teaspoon grated fresh ginger
- 1/3 cup lime juice
- 1 drop green food coloring
- 2 kiwis, peeled and very thinly sliced

PREPARATION:

Pour water into small saucepan, add sugar, lime zest and ginger. Stir over high heat until sugar dissolves and mixture comes to a boil. Remove from the heat and cool to room temperature.

Strain the syrup through a fine sieve set over a bowl. Stir in lime juice and food coloring.

Line 8 individual, frozen-treat molds or 2-oz. paper cups with slices of kiwi, pressing them onto the sides so they are close together but not overlapping. Fill each mold with the lime mixture.

Freeze until beginning to set, about 1 hour. Insert frozen treat sticks and freeze until completely firm. Dip the molds briefly in hot water before unmolding.

WHITEFISH BAY SEA SCOUTS

By Mike Kelley, Sea Scout Ship 5069
Committee Chair and Whitefish Bay
Resident

Free "Discover Sea Scouting" Sail Sat., Aug 29, 2-5pm

If you're a young man or woman between the ages of 14 and 20, discover how much fun sailing is by sailing with us on Saturday, August 29th, between 2:00 and 5:00 pm. There is no cost and no obligation (except to have fun). Parents are welcome, too. Space is limited. Reserve your spot now by sending an email to us at Ship5069@gmail.com or call (414) 962-0232.

The Sea Scouts have been sailing their 28-foot sailboat throughout the summer, including weekend sails to other Lake Michigan ports. There's still plenty of good sailing weather left. Autumn winds offer some of the best sailing of the season.

No prior sailing experience is needed to join. It's a learn-as-you-go program. Besides sailing, scouts learn about weather, using GPS, radio communications, and lake ecology.

Sea Scouts combine sailing with community service as a fun way to build character and to develop leadership—while teaching skills to last a lifetime. The program stresses that youth members plan and lead the activities while they are guided by trained adults. The program adheres to strict safety protocols with at least two adults always present. Dues are only $30 a year.

Like us at Facebook.com/Ship5069 to see what the Sea Scouts are doing.

Sea Scout Ship 5069, with members from Milwaukee and Ozaukee Counties, has been sailing for over 50 years. ●

911 DISPATCHER-ASSISTED CPR NOW AVAILABLE THROUGH COLLABORATION WITH MILWAUKEE COUNTY

A New, Joint Effort Program

Beginning June 24th, 2015, North Shore Fire/Rescue (NSFR) and the Bayside Communications Center (BCC), in collaboration with Milwaukee County Emergency Medical Services (MCEMS), the Medical College of Wisconsin (MCW) and the Milwaukee County of Emergency Management (MCOEM), began offering dispatcher-assisted CPR.

Better Cardiac Arrest Care for Whitefish Bay 911 Callers

When a person dials 9-1-1 in the communities served by North Shore Fire/Rescue, a tele-communicator will ask basic questions to determine whether that patient is suffering from cardiac arrest. The tele-communicator will also verify pertinent information (such as an address or specific location) to ensure that responding crews can quickly find the patient so emergency responders can be dispatched immediately. If it is determined that the patient is suffering from cardiac arrest while the North Shore Fire/Rescue units are responding, the 9-1-1 dispatcher will transfer the call to the Milwaukee County EMS Communications Center (EMSCOM). There, trained personnel will provide the caller or other bystanders with instructions on how to begin life-saving chest compressions. Though intricate, this information-gathering process and the transfer to EMSCOM will happen in one to two minutes. The average response time in the North Shore is approximately five to six minutes, which is within the National Standard. Providing early CPR is critical to the patient's outcome.

Program to Increase Survival Rate via Bystander CPR

Out-of-hospital cardiac arrest is a significant health problem in Milwaukee County. Only 10% of the approximately 800 out-of-hospital cardiac arrest patients treated in the County each year survives. When CPR is started by bystanders, the odds of survival double; however, bystander CPR is attempted on only 19% of cardiac arrest victims in Milwaukee County. This rate could be improved if every 9-1-1 caller received CPR coaching from dispatchers. This is a two-year project funded by the Advancing Healthier Wisconsin Endowment through its Healthier Wisconsin Partnership Program grant. You can follow this project at: www.facebook.com/milwaukeecountybystandercpr

For more information about the services offered by North Shore Fire/Rescue, including CPR training and certification offerings, visit our website: www.nsfire.org or call our Community Risk Reduction Bureau at (414) 357-0113, extension 1513. ●

THE IMPORTANCE OF CANINE SOCIALIZATION

BY KAREN SPARAPANI, MADACC

New Dog? Here are some tips for making the transition easier for you and your pet.

NEW PUPPY

The first 16 weeks of a dog's life are very important. During the first four months, a puppy will have experiences that will impact its behavior for the rest of its life. There are things you can do to make sure you give your puppy the best start in life:

1. Do not purchase a puppy that has not spent the first eight weeks with its littermates. Interactions between mom and puppy and among littermates are crucial to the development of a puppy's social skills.
2. Give your puppy positive experiences with other dogs, especially with other puppies. Many animal-related businesses offer puppy playtimes. Be sure your puppy is current on its vaccines, and make sure the place you choose requires the other puppies to be vaccinated as well.
3. Give your puppy positive experiences with all kinds of people, children, adults, people in hats, tall people and the mailman. Basically, this means interactions with anyone that will happily greet your puppy.
4. Let your dog live indoors. Dogs that live inside with family are always more comfortable with people and are more accustomed to the household bustle, and are much happier.

5. Expose your puppy to many different experiences, disturbances and noises, such as skateboards, bicycles, lawnmowers, vacuum cleaners and other noises. Touch the puppy, hold its collar and take toys away. Locate yourself near the food bowl when the puppy is eating. Accustoming your puppy to these experiences at a young age will make them comfortable with everyday occurrences throughout their lives.

NEW, OLDER DOG

Socialization is recommended for all dogs, but an adult dog requires a completely different process than a puppy. While there are always exceptions, socially mature dogs (between one and three years, depending on the breed) do not typically enjoy playing with large groups of unfamiliar dogs. They may either attempt to avoid the dogs, stand close to their human family or even growl and snap at boisterous young dogs that come too close. Such behavior is often misidentified as abnormal, when in fact, it is quite common.

If your heart is set on social time with other dogs, start by introducing it to one dog at a time. Invite a friend to bring a gentle, easygoing dog on a walk with you and your dog. Allow distance between dogs while they get accustomed to each other. If both dogs appear relaxed throughout the walk, allow them to briefly sniff each other. Keep leashes loose and each interaction short. If either dog appears to tense-up, call the dogs apart with a pleasant, relaxed voice. If both of the dogs' bodies appear loose and tails are wagging, consider an off-leash session in one of your fenced yards, with leashes dragging, using the same short sessions and reinforcement for relaxed behavior.

Teaching your adult dog appropriate behavior and protecting them from unwanted contact will go a long way in building a trusting relationship.

MADACC always has many wonderful adult dogs (and cats and kittens) available for adoption and interested families are welcome to visit. Visit our website at www.madacc.org or visit us seven days a week to see our adoptable animals. Call (414) 649-8640 or visit MADACC at 3839 W. Burnham Street, W. Milwaukee for more information. •

Bay Duo Writes Book that Explores the Stars

BY RON LEGRO AND AVI LANK

Ron Legro

Avi Lank

The extraordinary Kovac Planetarium near Rhineland is the subject of a newly published book by a pair of Whitefish Bay authors, Ron Legro and Avi Lank. We joined forces to tell the story of the planetarium and its creator, Frank Kovac Jr., after making separate visits to the facility in the woods of sparsely populated Monico, Wisconsin, several years ago.

The book, The Man Who Painted the Universe, The Story of a Planetarium in the Heart of the North Woods, was issued in May by the Wisconsin Historical Society Press of Madison.

Unlike most planetariums, the Kovac does not use a projector to display and move stars on its dome. Rather, visitors sit inside it and the dome rotates around them. On the ceiling of the dome, Kovac has painted more than 5,000 stars in an especially bright, luminescent pigment. The result is the world's largest rotating-globe planetarium, one of only four in the world.

Kovac imagined, planned and built the facility. He financed the enterprise, which he single-handedly runs as a profit-making business, almost entirely with earnings from his day job as a mill worker in Rhineland.

The planetarium features a 2-ton hollow, plywood sphere 22 feet in diameter, suspended from the roof of its building by a spring. The globe rotates on a track powered by a small electric motor.

The facility is accessible only by driving through the woods north of U.S. Highway 8, just inside the eastern border of Oneida County. A driver turns onto bumpy, unpaved Mud Creek Road and arrives at a neatly kept but unremarkable pre-fab building. It's what's inside that makes this journey special.

What Kovac has accomplished over years of hard work, almost entirely by himself, is absolutely amazing and a testament to the power of human vision and persistence. He is modest about his accomplishment, but he has a deep knowledge of his subject. And he was an absolute pleasure to work with.

Kovac sat for hours of interviews and answered scores of emails to help us understand how he moved from childhood in Chicago to owner of one of the premier tourist attractions in Wisconsin. Kovac dreamed of being an astronaut, but after taking courses at Chicago's famed Adler Planetarium decided he would have to find another way to satisfy his passion for the stars. The Man Who Painted the Universe recounts his unlikely journey.

We used the Whitefish Bay Public Library for research into the history of planetariums. Without it, writing the book would have been a much more difficult task.

We met as reporters for the old Milwaukee Sentinel in the 1970s, and before that we worked for competing newspapers in Binghamton, N.Y. We have been friends for many years and found co-authorship a pleasure rather than a challenge. Indeed, we are already beginning research on a second book.

The Man Who Painted the Universe is available in hard cover in bookstores here and nationally, and an eBook edition is available. The book also has its own web site: <https://www.facebook.com/pages/The-Man-Who-Painted-the-Universe/1609016525987868>. ●
